Ultra-low-kilometre Ferrari tipped to top $1 million at Sydney auction

Strong buyer interest is building around a 1,330km Ferrari 458 Speciale ahead of its auction through Pickles on 24 August.

18 August 2026: An exceptionally low-kilometre Ferrari 458 Speciale is expected to sell for more than $1 million when it goes under the hammer in Sydney on Monday, 24 August, following strong interest from collectors ahead of the auction.

The 2015 Ferrari has travelled just 1,330 kilometres and, based on current market feedback and buyer interest, Pickles expects bidding could push beyond the $1 million mark.

Interest in the vehicle has continued to build since it was first listed, with more than 12,300 listing views, 540 watchers, and 13 physical inspections to date. Serious buyers have also travelled from South Australia, Victoria and Queensland to inspect the car.

Pickles Head of Prestige and Dealer, Richard Bowen, says the response reflects the rarity of finding a Ferrari 458 Speciale with such limited use on the open market.

“We knew this was going to attract attention, but the level of interest we’ve seen ahead of the auction has been significant,” Bowen says.

“We’ve had serious collectors inspecting the vehicle in person, including buyers travelling interstate, as well as strong enquiry through our prestige team.

“Based on the feedback we’re receiving from the market, we believe this car has the potential to sell for more than $1 million.”

Finished in Ferrari’s iconic Rosso Corsa red with a blue and white NART racing stripe, the car represents a significant point in Ferrari’s performance history.

The 458 Speciale was the final high-performance model in Ferrari’s naturally aspirated, mid-engined V8 lineage before the manufacturer moved to turbocharging with the subsequent 488 series.

Powered by a naturally aspirated 4.5-litre V8 producing 445kW at 9,000rpm and 540Nm at 6,000rpm, the Speciale can accelerate from zero to 100km/h in a claimed 3.0 seconds.

Bowen says the combination of provenance, condition, and extremely low kilometres is driving collector interest.

“The 458 Speciale is already regarded as one of the standout Ferraris of the modern era, but examples showing only 1,330 kilometres are exceptionally difficult to find,” Bowen says.

“For collectors, that creates a very different proposition to a typical used performance car. It is the combination of what the Speciale represents in Ferrari’s history and the condition of this particular example that makes the auction so interesting.”

The vehicle is being offered through Pickles as part of a liquidation process, under instruction from Cor Cordis.

The Ferrari will be offered as part of the Pickles Luxury Vehicle Auction through Pickles at 6:00 p.m. AEST on Monday, 24 August 2026.
